cers of the Federal service. A soldier relates an exploit of his at South Mountain, which is worth recording.

During the battle of South Mountain the rebels held a very strong position. They were posted in the mountain pass, with infantry on the halpits on avery aide. Our men were composed to carry the place by storm. The position seemed impregnable; large craggy rocks protected the enemy on every side, while our men were exposed to a gailing are.

A band of rebels occupied a ledge on the extreme right, as the colonel approached with a few of his men. The unseen force poured upon them a volley. M'Neil, on the instant, gave the command:

"Four your fire upon those rocks!"

The Bucktails hesitated; it was not an order that they had been accustomed to receive; they had always picked their men.

"Fire "I' thandered the colonel, "I tell you to fire at those rocks!"

The men obeyed. For some time an irregular fire was kept up; the Bucktails sheitzering themselves as best they could behind trees and rocks. On a sudden, M'Neil caught sight of man, as if they stood in the presence of a man, as if they stood in the presence of a man, as if they stood in the presence of a man, as if they stood in the presence of a man, as if they stood in the presence of a man, as if they stood in the presence of a man, as if they stood in the presence of a man, as if they stood in the presence of a man and the colonel, "I will we call this year of war a year spent in value of war a year spent in value? Not so. It has emancipated sixes. It has made the coloned man a United States soldier on the Sea Islands of South Carolins. "Y with a minute," said the colonel, "I will ry my hand. There is nothing like killing we birds with one stone."

The two rabels were not in line, but one stood a little distance back of the other, while ust in front of the foremost was a stanting ock. Colonel M'Nell seized a rifle, raised it, lanced a moment along the polished barrel; a report followed, and both the rebels disap-seared. At that moment a load cheer a little listance beyond creat the air.

"All right now," oried the colonel; "charge Miscellaneous Items.

The Navigation of the Yang-the-Kiang.—
A gentleman residing at Hankow, in a letter dated the 18th September, says that a fine new American steamer arrived out there at the beginning of the week, for river-traffic, and the captain gave a grand hanquet on board to all the Europeans in Hankow. She is a magnificent boat, with splendid saloon, elegantly fitted dreiup, of about 2,000 tons register, and best Dent & Co.'s fastest steamer in the trip from Hankow to Shanghal.

'All right now," cried the colonel; "charge "All right now," cried the colonel; "charge the rascale."

The men appraing up among the rocks in an instant. The shrighted rebels turned to run, but encountered another body of the Bucktails, and were obliged to surrender. Not a man of them escaped. Every one saw the object of the colonel's order to fire at random among the rocks. He had sent a party around to their rear, and meant this to attract their attention. It was a perfect success.

The two robels, by the opening in the ledge, were found lying there stiff and cold. Colonel Whell's builts had struck the slanting rock in front of them, glanced, and passed through both their heads. There it lay beside them, flattened. The colonel picked it up and put it in his pocket.

Thursday last, ou Government arrests, is wide-ly commended for its strong sense and dislec-tic power. We have only space for the follow-ing paragraph cut from a condensed report of his remarks:

He was willing to admit that something had been done, apparently without law. There has been a great cry that the country is in danger, but when he saw where the cry came from, he regarded it no more than the cry of a pack of wolves. The cry comes from newspapers who have assailed the Government and thrown all the obstacles in the way that they could, and from men who are known to be in sympathy with the rebellion. If he (Fessenden) should find any fault, it would be that the President has not been quite strong enough he should have stricken down the great heads of disaffection instead of the smaller parties; if any great paper advised the military commander to seize the Government, he should strike down that. He was afraid there was more solicitude for individuals in this chamber than for the interest of the great masses in this struggle. There are right in some states of the proposals, and also the hands of all parties composing a firm of bidders.

REMINISHMOES OF THE DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION. Get. Scott, in his rejoinder to Ex. President Buchanan, essentially disposes of his pretext that the arms shipped to the Southern States during the latter part of his term were distributed as the quota due those States, or were condemned arms. He states that while the rebellion was impending, 115,000 stand of arms were transferred from Northern depositaties to Southern arsenals, of which 65,000 were new percussion muskets, 40,000 altered percussion muskets, and 1,000 percussion rifes, all arms of as good quality as those distributed to the army. He also shows that at that time, while Rhode Island, Delaware and Texas had not drawn their quotas for arms for 1800, and Massachusetts, Tennessee and Kentucky only in part, Virginis, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Al-shuma, Louisiana, Mississippi and Kanass were supplied with their quotas for 1801 in advance. This distribution was in addition to the 115,000 stand membioned above, which were merely stored in the South, as Mr. Buchanan says, to equalize the deposits among the different States.

Vallandigham.—The Bucyrus, Ohlo, Journal has the following incident of Mr. Vallandigham's late visit to Mansfield, Ohlo. After the speakers had concined, three men entered an omnibus to ride to a railroad station, and sat down. An unknown person was in the velice. One of them asked another, "Did you hear Vallandigham" "No" replied the other indignantly, "it would be more creditable to hear Jeff. Davis himself than that contemptible traitor, Vallandentootinham." Here the stranger started up, and, putting on a severe look and an extra amount of dignity, asid, disreely, "Lam Mr. Vallandigham "" if gon't make a bit of difference," firmly replied the gentleman, "I have nothing to take back." This completely cowed the butternut, and he kept entirely silent during the remainder of that trait in accordance with the terms of his proposal, and that, should the same be accepted, he will at proposals must be addressed to tapt. Mustering in Cultured Tweeps at Beautiful.
The following is from a letter to the New York Independent, dated Nov. 7:
This is a great day for the inhabitants of Beautiful and hisake, soldier and cliffen.

3 o'clock p, m.—I have been to see the missiering in of the first company of South Carolina volunteers. They were marshalled before the headquarters of Gen. Saxton.— stalwart band—proudly shouldering their guns, as they stood in their red panils, blue costs, and caps.

Gen. Saxton., (one of God's noblemen.) whom the world will honor, eameout and stood before them in military costume. Grouped around were parties of scotting soldiers—here and there are mother, whose curted lip and spiturused nose told the whole story of his patriotism and phisnithropy—while groups of negroes of all ages and sizes filled up the circle, waiching with starfling eyes for this atrange ceremony. General Sexton is tall, with a finely moided figure, straight as an arrow, very graceful in his motions and exceedingly active. After showing them follow him for a few moments, he addressed them—telling them in plain but very understandable language what would be expected of them as soldiers.

He them administered the oath, and turning towards the crowd of aneering officers, soldiers and isokeys, with a clear voice he pronounced them oil free—they, their wives, children, fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters—"and all your relations," he added, "and yon have a good a right to freedom as I have, or any other living man. Gos navara Madva Man roma a saxa".

As he said this, as with one turnuluous feeling of enthusiasm, every man in the company sprung his hat from his head, and swinging it high in air, gave three of the most tremendous cheers I ever heard. No one had prompted their manhood.

Bhall we call this year of war a year spent in van I you see free. Government had acknowledged their manhood.

N. B.—I have a special word to say to the Ladies.
